Course Description

6971. Strategic Human Resource Management. In today's dynamic and competitive environment, human resources are not simply an expense, but a source of competitive advantage and value creation. For this reason, Human Resources has become a critical strategic partner responsible for attracting, retaining, and managing an organization's most valuable assets – its people. In this course, participants will examine human resource management from a strategic perspective, enabling them to ensure that HR practices are aligned with organizational goals and strategies. The course is suitable for any manager who want to enhance their understanding of strategic human resource management, as well as human resources professionals who want to update their knowledge of best practices in the field. Prereq.: graduate standing, admission to the OMBA Program or permission from the MBA Program. 3 s.h.
